As in Argentina and Chile, the military engaged in executions, torture, and abductions, in addition to large-scale massacres. A political science degree will usually delve further into how these laws are initially put into place before they actually reach the court. Ducharme, Chandler, and Wiley 2013 describe the implementation studies that grew out of the CJ-DATS research initiative.

Five years later, the Supreme Court continued its trend of holding that children cannot be automatically punished the same way as adult criminals without considering their age and other factors, by further ruling that juveniles under the age of 18 who commit murder may not receive mandatory life sentences with no chance for parole 26. Consequently, a criminal defendant can become a victim of bias, corruption, ignorance, error, and even indifference.

Thus, for example, a war crimes tribunal may generate as much public discussion as a truth commission, it may be based on reasons or principles as widely accessible as those underlying a truth commission, and it may insist on trying only the worst offenders, thus economizing on moral disagreements. Lustration is the process of regulating how former government officials can participate in post-conflict government and social structures. Such a record is obviously important, for its own sake, as part of the very human project of keeping our history as accurately as possible.
