Childhood, Youth, and Religious Identity: Mapping the Terrain

Meanwhile the ultra-conservative John Stone, writing in The Australian newspaper 22 July 2005 put it more succinctly.

Dynamics of gender justice, conflict and social cohesion: Analysing educational reforms in Pakistan

Such an approach has difficulty with the concept of universal values of any sort, moving to a position of extreme cultural relativism. The CRE had demonstrated its awareness of widespread inequality in the world of civil power, where non-Anglos were barely represented in Parliament, and significantly under-represented in the police.

Childhood, Youth, and Religious Identity: Mapping the Terrain

Pockets of marginalised and angry young people, communities which disengage from each other, and ever more heavily militarised internal government security forces, now characterise societies where civil rights, which were recently seen to be the capstone of human social achievement, are being dissolved. Religious Leadership in Segregated Towns: A Changing Landscape 6.
