In the past, I had always been able to push away such feelings of emptiness with new toys, loud parties, and a lot of women.

Lessons from San Quentin

I had no choice but to keep trying to do better and to continually beg for forgiveness. Before the outbreak, two or three medical emergencies would occur on a given day; during the worst of the crisis, there were as many as 20 a day. Wow, what an amazing book.

On May 28, we were informed that the state Department of Corrections would transfer 121 inmates from the state prison in Chino, the facility with the largest coronavirus outbreak at the time, to San Quentin. Lockdowns are an inevitable part of the prison environment and so is the stress associated with the uncertainty of how long it will last.
