India: Family Planning and the Population Dilemma

Surveys done by the New Delhi Operations Research Group in 1991 indicated that as many as 72 percent of rural parents continue to have children until at least two sons are born; the preference for more than one son among urban parents was tabulated at 53 percent. Some states have repealed policies; introduced a policy in 2001 and repealed it in 2005.

But there was slow progress due to resources and manpower constraints. Another important family planning program is the Project for Community Action in Family Planning.

India's population dilemma

In many parts of India, male children are favored over female children, however efforts are being taken to change this attitude. To meet the reproductive and child health needs of the people of India and to achieve TFR by 2010, the provision of policy framework for advancing goals and priorities to various strategies is available in the National Population Policy announced on 15 February, 2000. Thus this acute gender inequity is also standing in the path of achievement of family planning programme.

As a result of the efforts made by the Government for solving this problem, the concepts like family welfare and family planning have gained popularity.

Population Policy of India (With Statistics)

ADVERTISEMENTS: The Family Planning Programme was renamed as Family Welfare Programme and efforts were made to increase integration of family planning services with those of child and maternal health and nutrition services. Once these goals have been achieved, birth control may be used or, especially in agricultural areas, it may not if additional child labor, later adult labor for the family, is deemed desirable.

What India Needs To Boost Women's Reproductive Health

At the Jamkhed Project in Maharashtra, which has been in operation since the late 1970s and covers approximately 175 villages, the local project directors noted that it required three to four years of education through direct contact with a couple for the idea of family planning to gain acceptance. The law also debars people with more than two children from applying for government jobs, and dismisses government employees if they violate this policy. The government must check social, scientific and demographic developments in order to make this legislation a success without political motivations.

Population Policy of India (With Statistics)

ADVERTISEMENTS: Another important measure was the integration of family planning services with health, maternity and child health care and nutrition. Such as agriculture, economy, education.
