Land rights of Pacific women

Access to land is a basic way to improve economic and social conditions.

Women and Land Rights

A nuanced approach to gender and land rights would be more useful to women and other disadvantaged groups in the process of disaster preparedness, mitigation and recovery and reconstruction. Custody is an ancillary matter and it may be difficult, although assuredly it is bad law, to prevent a finding of say, adultery, from influencing custody proceedings in such a regime.

TONGAN GOVERNMENT MULLS LAND RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

We are committed to working with partners to close the gap and make land rights for women a reality globally.

Gender and Land Tenure in the Context of Disaster

However, it needs to be pointed out that this area of the law is undergoing some changes.

Fasiha Farrukh

The women's groups noted that while Tonga's law does in a number of areas already comply with CEDAW there are areas where the current legislation is discriminatory, and these are in Land Rights, and Nationality Rights. This often relates to other vulnerabilities such as domestic violence and HIV and AIDS. If women have the opportunity to self-organise and take part in decision-making, often the whole community will benefit.

Dalit women's land rights: a struggle for survival, dignity and equal...

In the past the people who actually lived on or used a piece of land, whether they were related to one another through men or women, belonged to a community that included not only the living but also the ghosts of their dead ancestors.

Gender and Land Tenure in the Context of Disaster

The Cabinet this year approved in principal that Tonga will ratify the convention, and the Prime Minister yesterday indicated that this might be as soon as the end of the year. Notes Includes bibliographies and index. Without their husbands, brothers or fathers — in whose name land and property titles are traditionally held — they find themselves denied access to their homes and fields by male family members, former in-laws or neighbours.

It soon becomes clear that the values on which the traditional land rights system is based are incompatible with the kind of economic development now occurring. Over the five days of the workshop, there will be panel discussions each morning then, in the afternoon, concurrent sessions that are either interactive presentations or skills workshops.
