Simon Coleman shows that, along with many social movements, these religious conservatives are negotiating their own interpretations of global and postmodern processes. Through an interdisciplinary lens, Deborah Barnet examines the dynamic relationships between production and consumption, work and technology, biodiversity and cultural diversity, and health and environment. This research strives to find the role that education can play in balancing economic development and environmental conservation.

Sacred Longings Ecofeminist Theology and Globalisation by Mary C. Grey

Grey argues that there is a deeper language of desire concealing what humanity really wants. On the one hand it compels more countries to get involved in global production chains; however, on the other hand it also brings many adverse effects in still developing countries.
