Edutopia

In order to develop the skills and understandings associated with music education, children need to be immersed in an environment rich in musical experiences, where all the skills are being used in meaningful and purposeful ways, and where they are encouraged to take on all the roles of musical experience, that is, those of composer, auditor and performer. Hourigan, R, and Hourigan, A. For a wheelchair student, ensure the drum is positioned in a stable place and that the student is able to hit the drum with part of their body without hurting themselves on the rim of the drum.

Music Education for Students with Special Needs

They identified a professional requirement to justify their subject and felt that classroom work in music was not properly understood by many colleagues. Document any physical reactions you might have had. A report by OFSTED into the first year of the National Curriculum Music indicates that many secondary school music teachers need to be more aware of the music curriculum in the primary phase and of the standards being achieved.

This was a time, too, when instrumental activity had begun to dominate school music exclusively. If they acquiesce they may become knowledgeable about composers and their works without there being any commitment to real experience of them. Eventually it was the GCSE national criteria and the detailed format of GCSE examinations that signalled official acceptance of much that had been pioneered before.

It really is essential for politicians, civil servants, right-wing philosophers and other amateurs to withdraw. The surface pleasure of sounds—the sensory—personal expressiveness and the experimentally speculative are all necessary energies and motivation flowing from the student. Meanwhile, there is plenty of evidence to show that between them, the new teaching methods introduced during the 1960s still command support from large numbers of teachers.
