Health and Physical Education for Elementary Classroom Teachers With Web Resource

SPARK Sports, Play, and Active Recreation for Kids. Finally, System for Observing Fitness Instruction Time SOFIT classroom observations revealed that students in SPARK classes increased their time spent in vigorous- or moderate-intensity physical activity per class from 17. This can be a problem, especially when considering that the persistent demand for teachers to do more with their students has, unfortunately, pushed schools into thinking that movement and free play are just wasted time.

Classroom Physical Activity

In comparison with data prior to 2006, more states have developed mandates for physical education at both the elementary and secondary school levels. The full NASPE position statement on online physical education can be found at accessed February 1, 2013. External factors further strengthened programs, including having school district support, having a physical education coordinator, and using state standards to provide accountability.
