Cries of London, Plate 10, Old Chairs to Mend by Francis engraved by Giovanni VENDRAMINI WHEATLEY

The cards served a triple purpose for Greenaway: they provided a steady income, they gave her work public visibility, and they furnished a forum in which to develop the 'Greenaway child' that would become her hallmark. The highest rounds, or the lowest, if we indulge such latitude of speech, will be those near the top or the bottom; there being, absolutely, or in strictness of language, but one of each. The following, though not very commonly used, are perhaps allowable.

CRIES OF LONDON

In London, street vendors began to fill the streets in the decades following the when a major rebuilding programme led to the removal of London's main produce market, , in 1773. Hundreds were literally flung on the beach, left amid the mud and stones to crawl on the dry land how they could.

This included criticism of the use of man as a generic term to include men and women and of the use of he to refer to any human, regardless of sex or social gender. The scene was visited by hundreds. The prints, which were executed in stipple, were engraved by some of the most noted engravers in England; artists such as Luigi Schiavonetti, Giovanni Vendramini and Thomas Gaugain all contributed their work to the series.

The Grammar of English Grammars/Part II

Yet Murray has given us no other definitions or explanations of the persons than the foregoing erroneous assertions; and, if I mistake not, all the rest who are here named, have been content to define them only as he did.
