Mouthful of Rocks: Through Africa and Corsica in the French Foreign Legion by Christian Jennings

Boards moderately edgeworn and a bit frayed at top of spine.

Tomorrow To Be Brave book by Susan Travers

On December 27, 1953, the unit was airlifted to Laos, where after two weeks of operations it moved to Saigon, and then Nha Trang, for an amphibious landing near Tuy Hoa.

Foreign Legion Specialized Units in Indochina

She recounts her parts in some of the battles and in the resistance of and then breakout from Bir Hakeim. New members are traditionally allowed to change their identities - the author chose to alter his age becoming 28 not 38! With only a short training period and a nursing diploma, she joined De Gaulle's Free French Forces as a nurse in 1940, the only place for women at the time. Ten years after World War II was over, Susan was summoned to Les Invalides to receive the prestigious Military Medal, Travers was surprised to find it was Koenig, then France's defense minister, who pinned it on her chest.

March or Die, Canadian

When most authors would embellish and put themselves on a pedestal, Jennings talks about what a shitbag he is.

Pen and Sword Books: Fighting for the French Foreign Legion

It received one unit citation before being inactivated in Vietnam in 1955. Especially if you read the forward and get the real idea of who Mr.
