As government cutbacks in education, healthcare and other basic social infrastructure threaten to undercut long-term development, young people are emigrating to better their lives rather than suffer in an economy without jobs. However, technology-based planning was executed in a centralized, government-centric manner that greatly hindered its flexibility.

Soviet Union

The epidemic of divorces and extramarital affairs created social hardships when Soviet leaders wanted people to concentrate their efforts on growing the economy. This changed, however, from Brezhnev's accession and 's tenure as leader, during which the health care system was heavily criticized for many basic faults, such as the quality of service and the unevenness in its provision. In the following year, , which paved the way for the.

Soviet Union

During the later days of the USSR, countries with the same situation implemented similar policies. The final blow was struck on 1 December when Ukraine, the second-most powerful republic,. The institutions at lower levels were overseen and at times supplanted by.
